

In the creative field, generative AI is evolving from a simple tool into an active medium. The diffusion model essentially operates like a digital avant-garde collage. Just as early 20th-century surrealists like Max Ernst and Hannah Höch cut out and recombined existing cultural artifacts, generative AI can create entirely unexpected, dreamlike images. Because generative AI involves designing prompts for art, it can be said that the importance of curation is greatly emphasized.

In contemporary creative practice, AI broadens artists' range of choices and pushes the boundaries of imagination. Rather than replacing human imagination, generative tools have the ability to encourage more diverse challenges.

The work that left a strong impression on me in this assignment was by Wistawa Szymborska. Even in simple collages, the use of people stood out. What stood out to me was the simple, not overly complex, representation of either a single person or a human body with a figure attached. So for the assignment, I tried to convey the feeling of focusing on the main subject (the alien) while adding other objects, but I'm not sure if it turned out well.
